Psychodynamics of Human Development
Birkbeck, University of London

Course Introduction
This programme provides an understanding of human development through the theoretical and clinical issues raised by infant observation, work study seminars and through psychoanalytic and Jungian analytic theories. This includes recent research in child development and contemporary issues in psychodynamic or Jungian analytic theory. For the MSc, you will also be taught research methods and will complete an empirical or theoretical dissertation. This course is designed to provide: Professional and personal development for those working in settings such as community care, counselling, social services, primary care, mental health and education; a foundation, including accredited infant observation, for those considering psychotherapy training; fulfillment of the entry requirements for a Child and Adolescent Psychotherapy Doctorate.
